

Ichimei Honeycomb of Life

- Time and space began with one universe that was completely empty.
- The empty energy of nothingness gathered causing a reverse effect, forming a positive energy, then an actual object from that energy. This was the Keyline, which connected one point to the exact same point by a straight line in the curve of space along the universal horizon line. This Keyline had conscious thought, and was all knowing, it could even accurately predict the future. It even had consciousness and a personality.
- Odin emerged from the energy of the Keyline.
- Odin created a planet on which to live.
- To end his boredom, Odin created the God of Light; Gilgamesh, and Jormungand; the God of Darkness. At the time, they weren't thought of as gods, but normal beings. One was purely good, while the other was purely evil. Gilgamesh decided to create a being to work under him, as he worked under Odin, so he created The Honeycomb of Life. The term used to refer to this position is Warrior of Life. Jormungand did the same and created Ragnarok, whose position was called Warrior of Darkness.
- After a time, the Honeycomb of Life got bored with this dimension, and pushed out, forming another dimension, but there cannot be a set amount, so then, instead of one, an unlimited number of dimensions were formed. This was the Big Bang of theory. The term used to refer to all of these universes was the omniverse, which consisted of all universes and dimensions.
- The new dimensions were copies of the original, but the farther the dimensions went away from the original, the weaker the life forms and matter was.
- When they were created, several questions were formed. Who would watch over them? And since they were just copies, the beings in them did not have the divine energy which granted eternal youth, so what would they do with the dying souls?

- Gilgamesh, who was the God of Light, honor, life, and purity, decided to watch over the other dimensions.
- Odin realized that the dying souls would return to the original dimension, so they set up an afterlife for them.
- After a long time, they realized the original dimension would become “full”, so they had other afterlives set up under the care of lesser Gods created by Gilgamesh. In a rivalry, and to maintain balance, Jormungand created his own lesser Gods to watch over them as well.
- They realized that these after-lives would eventually become “full” as well, and the idea of reincarnation arose, and was put into action, though it was not direct reincarnation, the soul would live in the afterlife for a millenium or so then be reborn in another body.
- Just as everything was put into place, the Keyline made a prediction that a young boy who was not yet born would pose great significance to the omniverse.
- Jormungand, who was the weak and foolish God of darkness, dishonor, death and impurity, grew jealous of Gilgamesh’s position as watcher over the dimensions. Jormungand fought with Gilgamesh for the position. Gilgamesh honed all of his strength into a single blow and struck Jormungand with such strong energy behind it that it separated Jormungand’s physical body from his spirit. His spirit wandered the dimension he was killed in and eventually settled on a planet called Earth and is now in a lake named Erie.
- Ragnarok became the God of Darkness upon Jormungand’s death.
- Ragnarok fought Gilgamesh for revenge and the position Jormungand wanted. They fought in the same dimension Jormungand was killed in. This fight lasted for eons as the worlds evolved and changed from bacteria infested lava pits to the worlds there are today.
- While the fight raged, The Honeycomb of Life discovered that one of the planets in one of the dimensions had been destroyed. It investigated and found the source of the problem to be a single boy. The Honeycomb of Life realized that the boy had simply lost his sanity, so it recreated the planet for him.

- Ragnarok eventually killed Gilgamesh three years later, and the moment he died, Gilgamesh sent his own spirit into the body of a baby boy just before birth, one who had not yet been granted a spirit, and this boy was the one the Keyline had predicted would pose great significance.
- Upon Gilgamesh's death, The Honeycomb of Life was promoted to the God of Light.
- The Honeycomb of Life searched out this boy, who, as all reincarnations go, had no memory of what had happened to his spirit before.
- The boy was sent back in time, so that he was alive when Gilgamesh was killed.
- The Honeycomb of Life realized that the boy that destroyed his home planet many years ago, was the boy he was seeking.
- The Honeycomb of Life tracked down the boy, and took him under his wing.
- The boy became the Warrior of Light.
- Not knowing how to react, Ragnarok began training two Warriors of Darkness, one of which, the Keyline had predicted to have as much significance as the boy Warrior of Light did.
- Seven years later, the boy (Now a young man), the Honeycomb of Life, and Ragnarok met.
- The Honeycomb of Life sacrificed himself so the young man could live, but the young man was still killed by Ragnarok.
- When a god dies, and lets his spirit die with him, they return to nothingness, not an after-life.
- The young man became the God of Light upon the Honeycomb of Life's death.
- The young man became the God of Light even after his death, because when he died, he was mortal, therefor went to the after-life, where his spirit still existed, and still carried the trait of being the God of Light.

- Next to Ragnarok, the young man was the most powerful being in the omniverse, so Odin gave up his own existence so the young man could live again.
- Gilgamesh's power combined with his own and the young man became the Angel of Destiny, a being with infinite power. His strength, speed, and all abilities were infinite.
- The young man killed Ragnarok and the weaker Warrior of Darkness.
- The other Warrior of Darkness became the God of Darkness.
- Upon his death, Ragnarok's spirit combined with the other Warrior of Darkness, making him the Devil of Destiny.
- The Devil of Destiny killed the young man's wife.
- The young man and the Devil of Destiny fight in a dimension with no life.
- The Devil of Destiny and the young man kill each other, the force of their deaths destroys the dimension.
- The young man was killed last, but this was unapparent even to himself.
- Because there is no longer a conflicting God, because there is no longer a God of Gods, because his own powers are infinite, and because the young man was promoted to the God of Gods, the boy became all-powerful, with complete control over everything. He became immortal, not just with eternal youth, but with eternal life as well.
- The young man revived his wife and gave her eternal youth. (Not eternal life because that is not something you can give.) He lived with his wife, preventing any other great evils from erupting.
- Many years later, the dark side of the Keyline managed to gain control of the Keyline, and began causing destruction.
- The man went to the Keyline to find the cause of the trouble.
- After many fights against figments of those he respected and held dear, he found and defeated the Dark Keyline.
- Here he discovered that his dear wife was the Light Keyline.
- He also found he had not completely killed the Dark Keyline, so went to the 5th dimension, where what was left of her awaited.

- After a long, grueling battle, he completely defeated the Dark Keyline.
- Many hundreds of millennia later, the man awoke in his sleep to find a message for him in the form of a voice and a burning forest.
- The Devil of Destiny's soul had never been destroyed, but had been roaming the afterlife plotting revenge.
- While the man's back was turned, the Devil of Destiny had gathered every god of darkness, and in one fell swoop killed every god of light.
- The Devil of Destiny waited in the 5th dimension, with an army of gods behind him.
- The man and his wife, the Light Keyline, gave up much of their own divine energy to make an infinite number of copies of their friends all with the strength of divine energy.
- This evened the man and the Devil of Destiny's strength.
- The man and his army traveled to the 5th dimension where the two equal armies faced off. And war began.
- In the war, the man's wife was killed. This filled him with rage.
- In a moment of extreme power and hate, the man completely destroyed both armies, leaving only him and the Devil of Destiny.
- The man punished the Devil of Destiny severely until by a dirty trick; their power was once again equaled.
- The two fought out of rage and hate. They fought a hard, painful battle, for a very long time, with the entire Omniverse watching, knowing their fate was in their hands.
- In the end, the man gave his very life to kill the Devil of Destiny.
- Many people still feel that the man is still there with them, though they are unable to see or comprehend him.